Dearest Lost Heart: —

How is my precious Hubby dear to-day? It sure is wonderful out. Well, Lookie dear, only a week more in Bellaire I quit just a week to-day. Next Monday is proclaimed a holiday, & if the peace is closed, that makes it only 5 more days here. Although they probably will expect me in on the Monday. I will make good use of it, as I am off on Sunday. In those 2 days I hope to accomplish quite a lot. And then, honey lad, two weeks from-to-morrow! Where will I start for? And to when?

As to the case, lad, the railroad will allow me a case. It will come on the same train with me. Won't have the express expenses by sending it by freight.

Mom is feeling better. Improving all the time. The only thing is that she can't sleep, - and that is terrible. The doctors claim as her heart regains its normal condition sleep will come naturally. To-night however, he said he would give her something to produce sleep. I spoke to the ward doctor & he says she is getting along nicely. Each day he gives her a thorough examination. Rev. Kell saw him about Mom's case and told the Rev. to tell Mom that she is kept so busy that she finds it impossible to get up as often as she would like to. There is always a lot a people looking for her, that's a fact.

Henry came up yesterday to see mom. He is looking well, and his tonsils are entirely healed. Lena & Bertha brought him down, & I then I went up found Aunt Rosie & Uncle Jack there. Somehow or other I couldn't talk to them & ignore them so entirely, that I afterwards felt sorry. I didn't even say Hello to either of them — ignored them as though they never existed. Somehow I couldn't help it, although I afterwards felt sorry. Rose says everything is going along nicely at home.

Well, lovey dove, I shall soon be with you. Was happy with you, tho? Only a little bit, eh?

Shall close with all my love, hugs, & kisses to my precious hubby love,

Your "everlasting" wifie,

Frances

Just rec'd your Monday letter. Honey, unless you take the house next the store in for mom, don't take a place without a bath. I can't picture how we can get thro the hot months without one, unless, of course there is no other choice. Sooner get a smaller place as a bath is essential.
